A Ranch Your Kids Want to Go to...

Sherry and I have learned something about get-aways for families. How much you use your get-away place is directly related to how much your kids want to go. Kids like to bring their friends when we go away from home or meet their friends at a cool place away. For me, I am happy to get away to the country and move some brush around with a tractor. I'll follow it up with enjoying a glass of wine with my wife, Sherry, while we enjoy watching the moon rise. "Duh. Boring," say the kids. Sure, our kids enjoy joining us for a time in the things we like to do, but not for an entire weekend, let alone an entire week. On the other hand, our kids get really excited to go if they can bring a group of their friends. It is exciting to see Frio Cañon developing into a small community of families whose kids are all friends! They don't have to always bring their friends with them, because some of them will already be there! As our youngest two grow into young adults and begin to drive themselves, having a place they can go spontaneously is as good as it gets. When we had our house in Alaska, our girls could never just decide on a Friday to go to our cabin with a pack of friends for the weekend. Now they can and they do. Amanda, our third-eldest, is 24 and was married in September. She had her Bachelorette party at our two cabins at Frio Cañon. Crawford, her fiancée, thought that was such a great idea, he decided to have his Bachelor party there as well! They played golf, hiked, went swimming, told tales and they were all able to simply drive there. There was no airport hassle, just a peaceful drive through one of the most beautiful areas of the Texas Hill Country. Whether it is families that have toddlers or teenagers, it is so much more convenient and much more accessible to have a place where you can just get up and go. This is why we love Frio Cañon so much. As one of our good friends said, "Frio Cañon is a ranch the kids want to go to!"
